ABOUT THIS BREEDER

BREEDER PHILOSOPHY

My breeding philosophy is rooted in lineage, intention, and respect for the plant. Every cross I make is deliberate guided by proven genetics, not guesswork. I study parent plants deeply, selecting for traits that persist: structure, vein clarity, sinus form, emergent color, and longterm expression. It's not about chasing hype it's about building something that holds up over generations.

I believe great plants come from understanding what came before them. Lineage matters. Knowing where a plant comes from allows me to predict where it can go. Whether I'm working with dark foliage, red venation, or refined minimal veining, each pairing is a step toward a larger vision.

Consistency in growing is just as important as genetics. Stable environments, strong roots, and healthy microbial life all play a role in how traits express. I treat cultivation as both science and art where data and intuition meet.

There's also an energy component. The time spent in the grow, the care in each pollination, the patience in each seedling it all matters. These plants carry that intention forward.

At its core, my work is about creating plants with identity plants that tell a story. Not just something rare, but something meaningful, traceable, and worth passing on.
